Paddling the Chumash Way

Presenter: Alan Salazar

Alan Salazar (spirit hawk), Native American consultant/monitor and Chumash-Tataviam traditional storyteller, will share his personal experience of reviving the Chumash craftsmanship of the tomol (plank canoe). Alan will describe Chumash journeys between Malibu and the Channel Islands, and recount a harrowing paddling journey in a storm. Alan Salazar in the news

Water, Water, Water, Water

Presenter: Tom Nachtrab, SSMPA Board member

Come hear Tom spout about water:

salt and fresh; flood and drought; rising and falling;
solid, liquid and gas; freezing and melting; evaporating and condensing;
sublimating and precipitating; as a greenhouse gas; potable and not;
bottled and piped; polluted and clean; dammed and flowing;
expensive and cheap; springs and seeps; aquifers and wells;
treated wastewater and the yuck factor;
purple pipes; reclamation and de-reclamation;
agricultural, industrial, urban, and environmental;
Owens Valley and Chatsworth Reservoir; channels and spreading grounds;
peripheral canals and under-bay tunnels;
and more...

Followed by free-flowing open discussion.

Nature: How do you relate to it?

"One group [of people] knows and respects the power of nature, is able to feel its majesty and is aware of our insignificance and smallness before the cosmos.

"The other [group], enamored of the machines that obliterate distance and effort, and that insulate us from the natural world in a technological bubble, is largely dead to the rhythms that sustain life."

OAT MOUNTAIN:

Oil, Fracking, No Fracking, Environment, Health, Soft Oil Prices, Next?

SSMPA's mission embraces protection of the Santa Susana Mountains. Oat Mountain, the highland prominent above Porter Ranch and Chatsworth, constitutes the eastern end of the Santa Susana range.

Oat Mountain has been a center of local controversy for more than a year now, a controversy stimulated by the Termo Company's effort to gain approvals for drilling up to twelve new oil wells (it already operates 18) near the mountain's ridge line.

Community opposition to the plan originally centered on possible dangers of the potential use of fracking methods at the new wells. (Fracking includes many combinations of aggressive "stimulating" techniques to drive oil out of rock formations, including: high-pressure infusion of water and chemicals to fracture "tight" oil-bearing rock strata; horizontal drilling; and acidization.)

Sufficient community opposition arose that Termo Company agreed to execute a full Environmental Impact Report for the proposal. Termo also recently pledged to not do any fracking, and to re-apply for permits if it ever decided to frack in future. Some opponents may have been disappointed to see the crowd-mobilizing anti-fracking issue shoved to the sideline.

More recently opponents are focusing on possible negative public health consequences of even doing any more conventional drilling so close to the urban centers of Porter Ranch, Chatsworth, and Granada Hills. Many, including SSMPA and some elected officials (Englander, Pavley), are calling on Termo to produce a health impact report in addition to the in-progress Environmental Impact Report.

Might this year-long controversy fade away quietly in the near future, as the environmental and social issues become overshadowed by a simple economic factor: the unbelievably low price of crude oil over the past year? It seems possible. Oil prices have fallen by 60% to their lowest level in seven years. Will Termo forge ahead with plans to spend millions of dollars in exploratory drilling on Oat Mountain while the price of a barrel of oil continues to hover around 40 dollars a barrel?

Economic "laws" could actually forestall a bit of environmental degradation of the Santa Susana Mountains ... but for how long?

SSMPA has urged the preparers of the Environmental Impact Report for the Termo North Aliso Field Project to evaluate in depth all predictable recreational, public access, aesthetic/visual, and site security impacts entailed by the federal and county plans for implementation of trails in the Santa Susana Mountains.

SSMPA Releases Recommendations for a Sustainable Chatsworth Nature Preserve

Most of the land that lies between Plummer Street and Roscoe Blvd., and between Topanga Canyon and Valley Circle Blvds. was seasonal wetland and oak savannah for centuries. Then, in about 1917, the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power acquired over 1,300 acres of the land, built a couple of dams, and transformed the space into "Chatsworth Reservoir."

Use of the area as a functional reservoir for water ended in 1969. The property, still owned by LADWP, has been in a kind of limbo for the last 45 years. In the mid-1990s the Los Angeles City Council approved zoning changes, intended to forestall development of the property, and changed its name from Chatsworth Reservoir to Chatsworth Nature Preserve.

For many years a shallow "Ecology Pond" has existed on the northern section of the property. The pond often shrank due to evaporation and lack of rain during summer seasons, but DWP usually refilled the pond with water from its public water utility distribution system. The summer of 2015 saw the pond dry up completely, and because of the statewide drought emergency, DWP will not use potable water to refill the ecology pond. DWP is hauling non-potable water to the pond site now, but it evaporates and infiltrates as fast as it is dumped. Many residents are distressed about the loss of a viable pond.

SSMPA sees three relatively distinct unresolved concerns about the Chatsworth Nature Preserve right now:

1. Ecology Pond: DWP suggests that it will remodel the pond through dredging, lining, etc. This concern regards the unknowns involved in if, when, and how the pond will be revitalized in the midst of the drought crisis, and how adequate the result will be.
2. Protecting the property from future development: As long as DWP owns the land there may be a possibility that it could be sold for commercial or residential development. Although the site has been "named" a Nature Preserve, there may not be adequate protections in place to keep it in the public domain.
3. Operating a healthy and sustainable nature preserve: Action is needed to develop and adhere to a long-term plan to restore and maintain a viable nature preserve.

The Chatsworth Nature Preserve, owned by the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power (DWP), has reached a critical juncture where immediate action must be taken to avoid further, permanent damage to the habitat that the City of Los Angeles has seen fit to preserve.

SSMPA recently issued the following report addressing some of our concerns about the future of the Chatsworth Nature Preserve.

Residential Development Goes “Boom”: Scrambling Up Our Hills

The good news, for some, is that the local "real estate market" is hot again. The current, high market prices for residential real estate mean that developers all around the San Fernando and Simi Valleys are racing to ramp up their plans to build new housing subdivisions.

Some of the plans that were put "on hold" by developers waiting for a return of high prices were approved years ago. Construction has started on many such developments (Sterling at West Hills in Dayton Canyon, for example). Developers are pushing other plans through the permitting process as quickly as possible (Hidden Creeks Estates near Brown's and Mormon Canyon, for example).

This development boom is not necessarily good news for conservationists, SSMPA included. Developing more housing by "infilling" in the Valleys is one thing. Carving and flattening our local foothills, mountains, and open space with residential developments of high-priced "luxury residence estates" is a radically different thing.

SSMPA's mission is to preserve and protect the Simi Hills, Santa Susana Mountains, and regional open space.
